May is Safety Month at UC Davis, with activities and training offered each week to help keep you safe and healthy - both on and off campus - all year long. At Safety Services, we want everyone to think safe, act safe and be safe, and the following four weeks address a range of risks for which we can prepare, whether you work in a lab, a cubicle or alongside a river in Rwanda.

Emergency Management & Mission Continuity - See all events/activities  [1]

From the initial WarnMe message through the “all clear,” safety officials are improving UC Davis’ emergency preparedness to better respond when something disrupts our mission. Campus safety is a shared responsibility and you can get prepared by attending active-shooter training or a session about how UC Davis commands, controls and communicates during emergencies of all types.
Week of May 6

Well-being & Ergonomics - See all events/activities [2]
Do some Tai Chi, visit the Health and Wellness Zone at TGFS, nourish yourself at the UC Davis Farmers Market and attend a noontime session exploring how sound ergonomics and proper nutrition can help improve your well-being and productivity at work - providing results that will last long after you leave UC Davis.

Field Safety & EpiPen Training - See all events/activities [3]
When your job or research takes you, colleagues and students to remote locations, you should have a Field Safety Plan, and potentially an epinephrine auto-injector (EpiPen) in your first-aid kit. This week, field safety experts will provide field safety planning workshops, as well as CPR and epinephrine training for anyone who may encounter bees, particularly when you’re remote and disconnected.

Week of May 20

Youth Protection - See all events/activities [4]
Creating a safe space for minors helps ensure their positive engagement with UC Davis faculty, staff and students. When you host programs and activities for minors, you bear responsibility for their protection - from the staff you hire to the facilities they participate in. Further you must register camps, internships and other activities when UC Davis assumes responsibility for a minor. UC Davis offers support to help you plan and safely operate a program involving minors, from managing challenging behavior and supervising in various activity areas, to social media use.
